Captain Bell was also a poet. Not a very good one, though. His listeners never enjoyed his poetry much. Every time the pirates boarded an enemy ship, Captain Bell was the first to jump on its deck. Then he yelled:

Ring-a-ding ding -
it's time to sleep
And all your treasure's mine to keep!

Or:
Ring-a-ding ding -
it's time to wake,
Heads to break and
gold to take!

At that time he was so famous everyone in the world knew his name. Every mouse, every mother and every child, every flea, every horse, every bird and every worm. Even the teachers had heard about him. That's how dangerous he was. And how infamous his awful poems had become.

However, it was the kings and queens of each and every country who knew Captain Bell best. It was their gold he kept stealing from their ships and ports, after all.
